May We Better Discern The False-Charging Voices

Q #52 Why do you employ an Allegorical hermeneutic?

Since this claim is about the most unevidenced one we have heard to date, we feel a response is in order. Is this the best some can do to seek to undermine our credible appeal: “What does the biblical text actually teach?” Wrongfully attacking someone's integrity (credibility) is not what our Lord Jesus has called His people to be doing.

Since this accusation has indeed been made, let me ask those who are bringing this charge a fair question: Please identify how we even begin to appear to be bringing an allegorical hermeneutic? If judgments are made, they need to be evidenced. So, we respectfully ask: On what grounds is this concern made? Please! Write to us and evidence your charge. If you cannot present grounds in support of your claim, it should be dropped. If this charge continues, we will continue to reject it as false judgment and let the facts speak for themselves.

Throughout our ministry materials we model a strong commitment to the actual data of Scripture. We are as far from allegorical as one can get. (This approach still affirms the various genres found within the Word of God.) If you have any doubts about this, please read over our web sites. This action will absolutely clarify the perspective from which we're coming. You can also see evidence of a what-does-the-biblical-text-actually-teach commitment in our book titled, The Final Trumpet Rapture Gathering: An Introduction.
